The Fairfax County Federation of Teachers' Grant/Scholarship program is designed to provide financial support to our members.

Grant funds are awarded to support selected instructional programs which will benefit teachers and students. Our scholarships are rewarded to help our members further their education.

The Course at Old Hickory Golf Club was designed to fit its site with great precision. The Par-72, 7077-yard championship layout is the work of architect Tim Freeland, who previously worked for the design firm of golf legend Gary Player. "It is gently rolling terrain covered with pine, oak, maple, and hickory," said Freeland. "It's bisected by Beaver Creek with about nine holes to the north and nine to the south of the creek. For about half the holes, we didn't have to move any earth at all; the holes just set down into their site naturally."

Other creeks, tributaries of Beaver Creek, trickle through the property, and Freeland incorporated them into the design. Where housing sites are located, they lie toward the high side of the fairways to make it more comfortable for golfers.

You will find the fairways very wide and open, but also mounded on the sides so balls will bounce back toward the middle. You can also use those mounds to get a forward bounce if you're a skillful player.

"Every hole is bunkered on this course, but the course is not overly bunkered," said Steve Clark, the director of operations for Old Hickory. "The grass on our greens is A4 bent grass, known for creating fast greens."
